Fundamentalism:

A gang of drug dealers from the Middle East, fundamentalists on a mission from God, import high quality opiates for high profits. Also, on the bus that Klug takes from LAX (Los Angeles airport), several passengers follow a strong literal understanding of Christianity which only heats up the atmosphere.

New Age Spiritual Healing:

During a bus ride from LAX to Las Vegas, Kris Klug meets Sheila who is well acquainted with the self-help aspects of New Age philosophy. She applies keen insight in helping Klug resolve issues of Post-traumatic-stress-syndrome.

American politics:

As a young recruit into the Army, Klug worked hard to prove himself with a gung-ho patriotic attitude. His dedication pays off as he moves into the elite Green Berets. After combat missions, skepticism replaces his credulity in many aspects of the war. He questions American foreign policy among other things.

Mojave Winds:

He returns to his country, his hollowed out soul gnawing away at him, until love floats in on Mojave Winds.

A Mid-western kid ships off to serve his country--four years later--Kris Klug comes back a man looking for a job. He counts on his Uncle Fred as a bridge back to the civilian world. He yearns for simple, peaceful living.

After meeting up with his Uncle Fred for a job in his trucking outfit hauling goods between Los Angeles and Las Vegas, Klug discovers an underworld where thugs and cokeheads snare him and dump him in the Mojave.

With gangsters at his heels, Klug sinks into his darkest hour. Love comes his way when he least expects to survive. Mojave Winds carry the devil's breath and maybe, just maybe, an angel's mercy.
